U.S. Accuses Poland

WASHINGTON, June 4 — The Reagan Administration accused Poland today of making "trumped-up charges" that the United States had kept from Solidarity leaders secret information about the impending imposition by Polish authorities of martial law in December 1981.

A high-ranking Administration official, who was involved in Polish affairs in 1981, said today, "I knew of the defector, but never heard of the Dec. 15 deadline."

The senior State Department officials involved in dealing with Poland in that period were Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.; Walter J. Stoessel Jr., Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, and Lawrence S. Eagleburger, Assistant Secretary of State for European affairs. All of them are now out of government.

"The fact was, there were many reports coming out of Poland, from many channels, and this was just one of them," another former Government official said. "We had no firm date or time, and we couldn't be sure it would happen."

The official Administration statement, issued by the State Department, said, "During the confused weeks leading up to the imposition of martial law, the United States obtained conflicting reports from various sources about possible steps that the Soviet Government or the Polish Government might take against Solidarity and the Polish people."

"We were well aware of the possibility of martial law but had no definitive information as to whether or when such a step might actually be taken," it said.

"In the absence of such information, our objective was to convince the Polish Government to work out a solution with Solidarity," a spokesman said.
